Talking parents free

While it is true that each family is different, there are some experiences, observations and feelings about parenting that go without a word – literally. Even though you can't understand them until you're there, no one warns you ahead of time. So, whether you're a first-time parent or expecting a fourth child, you'll probably be able to identify with more, if not all, of these overly neglected, and sometimes hilarious, truths about parenting. Check out our list of cold, hard-to-use parenting facts that no one warns you about. In fact, there will be days when you feel that parenting is a mistake. Don't feel bad about feeling that way. Anyone who says it's always sunny and rainbows lie. Everyone has days when they wonder if they really have a right to be a parent. Trust us, you know. Whether you leave your child on the couch for a second and the first roll on the floor, or they're bouncing on the preschooler's bed, and they jump right away... accidents occur. Don't fight too much. Every parent has been there at least once. In fact, most parents assume that a newborn stage with kolicky babies is the toughest parenting season. But wait till your teenager starts driving or walking. You will wait for the days when you were most concerned about whether your child had fallen asleep or not. Regardless of whether it's your high level of frustration, your inability to focus, your chronic weakness, or your constant delay, you'll see these things in your children. And that's going to make you cringe. After a few times witnessing these bad habits, you will want to become a better person. At first, you may not be aware of it because it is a slow progression. But one day, when you say something like that, don't make me turn the car around. It's going to shock you to the core. You became a mother (or father). For a while, you'll be the only one who can understand his children or know what they're saying. So, you basically become an interpreter for them and you'll find you saying things like: He's hungry, She's asking for milk, or afraid of people with beards. I'm sorry. You won't know this is happening until it suddenly happens. It's Friday night, and you finally have a few minutes to sit down and watch the adult show. But, the only thing on your list of recommendations is Curious George, Disney princesses, and Spongebob. Poor little fur baby was in the spotlight until the human baby arrived. You'll wonder when I last put fresh water in a dog bowl. One basket of baby laundry will take four times as long to fold and clean up. There are so many pieces. And that's crazy! It's nobody's fault. It's just. You want to talk about your children, their milestones and their activities, and your friends want to talk about their careers, their holidays and the latest book they read – all the things you can barely read time for. There's going to be a lot of awkward pauses, and you're going to feel guilty about talking about your kids. Nope. Nothing. You don't even take a kid to school, breastfeed in public or eat a screaming kid on a train. In these days, you have to take care of more than appearance. Whether you have a newborn in a bouncy chair in the bathroom with you, or a toddler who's breaking down on the bathroom door, you can give up on using the bathroom without interruption. Even teenagers will need something or want to know where something is as soon as you close the bathroom door. It doesn't matter if you have small or teenagers, responsibilities, carpuling, running around – it's all a tediously long to-do list. Likewise, any trip out of the house – even if it's just a destination – will feel like you're packing up for a trip abroad. He doesn't feel bad about celebrating these achievements. Whether you sneak out of the nursery at night, sneak into the preschool room after a book, or get up without a child's sleep, you'll learn to get involved in and out of a situation like ninja. Let's face it, babies are funny. Kids are funny. They do and say the funniest things, and you're going to laugh so hard, sometimes you're going to get hurt. And that will give you more joy than you ever imagined. That's why moms become known for wearing missed clothes. They spend all their money on kids. Whether you're watching a Disney channel or watching the latest Toy Story movie, you'll actually be looking forward to watching these shows. It's not so much because they offer great entertainment, but they are a great way to relax and squeeze with the kids. No matter how determined you are about maintaining your current friendship, some of them will get away with it. It's just a fact. For example, you might stop going out or spend weekends away and instead spend more time with moms from neighborhood gaming groups. As your children get older, you may become friends with a few parents in the PTA or with your child's travel sports team. It's nobody's fault. That's how life works. After all, you spend enough time dealing with saliva, melting, vomiting and crying with your own children. Your level of tolerance may not be when other children are around. You never thought this would happen, but here you are. You're wearing a typical mom or dad uniform. After all, you're too tired to care. Therefore, you choose to ease, comfort and cotton. Who knows what's going to eat your mind. From early stages of parenting, when you're worried about your child pooping, peeing and breastfeeding habits to later stages when you worry about texting and driving, dating and ratings, there's never a moment when you're not worried about something. No matter how often you clean your car, you can't get away from spilled juice and crushed cheerios and Goldfish, not to mention mountains for games, extra diapers, and Shit that's going to pull your floor. Even when your kids are older, their stinking sports gear and McDonald's 20-year-olds will drive you out of all the trucks. Your car will never be the same. And their little sleuths can burn your battery. When they get older, they'll hack into your Facebook account and take random selfies of themselves. What's yours becomes theirs, no matter how hard you try, even your precious iPhone. Maybe it's baby vomit, sticky fingers, or even the teen's first attempt to do great laundry. But that won't bother you as much as you'd think. At first you may be a little confused, but the next big smile or squeeze you get will erase all that frustration. You just don't have time to sit down and enjoy your meal, because just when you do, someone needs a 9prenal. Even when children are older and you lock them from point A to point B, you will find yourself eating along the way. But your kid's going to have noses like A-9s, and he can taste chocolate like nobody's business. As a result, you will resort to filling whole chocolate bars in your mouth while you squeeze in the laundry room or resort to hiding in the freezer inside an empty broccoli bag. Just because you would never eat a processed chicken nugget or a box of macaroni and cheese in front of the kids doesn't mean you won't do it now. Sometimes there's not enough time to make yourself the salad you should have. In the end, you eat what the kids eat, and you pretend it tastes good. No one tells you how much poop you're going to deal with. Healthy toddlers can poop three times a day. And because they now eat solid foods and don't breastfeed or feed on formula, it stinks. It really stinks. And you have to deal with it every day. Even when they're adults, the smell in the bathroom could knock you off your feet. No one tells you how madly lonely she can be. It doesn't really matter if you're a home mom or a working mom. Your free time is almost always spent caring for your children. For this reason, it is extremely important to take some adult time if you can. Even if it's just a cup of coffee with a friend while the baby inflates upstairs. Life after children can ruin a marriage. Suddenly it becomes insanely difficult to find time alone together, especially when the resources for the nanny are hard. At first you can try to have a date night while the baby sleeps, but often find that you are too exhausted to even have an intelligent conversation. Then when the kids are older and stay up later, you're looking for a family calendar for window opportunities here and there to make it intimate. This reality is a major cultural shock for many parents. After all the excited baby's arrival at night, it can be really boring to do the same things day by day. The endless cycle of feeding, sleeping, and diaper changes is enough to make anyone crazy. Social media contributes to this phenomenon. But People will judge everything from what your baby looks like and dress to what you feed your children. They will also judge your parenting style, how well your child works at school, and even their athletic or musical abilities. In fact, there will be times when you feel like you're living in a fish farm and you can't do anything without others having an opinion. Whether it's a missed developmental milestone as a baby, or whether he's not going to make a football team during high school, your heart will break again and again. Anything that affects your child will affect you tenfold. You will feel every rejection, every sadness, every disappointment your child experiences and it will break your heart. Even good things like their first date, headed to college, and get their first apartment will break their heart a little bit for a little bit. Whether you've dreamed of progressing your career, continuing your schooling, or even changing your Thursday night basketball game with the boys, your life has changed more than you might expect. Some things just need to be put on the back burner. You may even struggle to find your sense of self now that you have a child. While it can sometimes be crazy to be a parent, there are other times when being a mother or father is one of the most rewarding experiences of life. Both will love – and hate – every level of parenting. In fact, every stage will become your new favorite, except when they go to college. Enjoy it while it lasts. Your children grow up in an instant. Eyes.
